QUICK TIPS!

Ionization:
For rooms that contain highly combustible materials that can create flaming fires. These types of materials include flammable liquids, newspapers, and paint cleaning solutions.

Photoelectric:
For living rooms, bedrooms and kitchens. This is because these rooms often contain large pieces of furniture, such as sofas, chairs, mattresses, counter tops, etc. which will burn slowly and create more smouldering smoke than flames.

Carbon Monoxide:
Detect an invisible, odourless, poisonous gas that can be fatal when inhaled. It is the #1 cause of unintentional poisoning deaths in North America.

It's impossible to say one sensor - photo or ion - is universally better at detecting all types of fires.

Why?
Because both sensors are designed to respond to combustion particles produced by smouldering or flaming fires, and because fires themselves are different.
